Antarctica

Antarctica is the coldest, driest, and windiest continent on Earth, almost entirely covered by ice.

Although it has no permanent population or culture, scientists from around the world live there temporarily to study the climate, wildlife, and ice.

There are no cities in Antarctica, but several countries have research stations where men and women work together in science and exploration.

This unique place helps scientists learn more about the environment and how to protect our planet.

Antarctica does not have an official flag recognized by all countries, as it is not a country but a continent dedicated to peace and scientific research. However, a commonly used unofficial flag, called "True South," represents the importance of international cooperation and the preservation of the continent. This flag shows a map of Antarctica in white on a dark blue background, symbolizing its cold and remote environment.
